Joe Mac Hudspeth, Jr.'s first attempt at wildlife photography occurred some thirty years ago when he photographed a sunning screech owl with a Kodak 110 Pocket Instamatic camera. Since then the self-taught Mississippi photographer has turned his hobby into a part-time job with his work appearing in numerous state, regional and national publications. In 1993 he received national recognition when his image of an immature least bittern was awarded the "Grand Prize for Wildlife" by the Roger Tory Peterson Institute for Natural History.

Since 1997 his photographs have graced Mississippi Duck Stamps and Mississippi Sportsman's Licenses and he has published signed and numbered lithographic prints of them.
